

Ombuds/Dispute Resolution Services for Faculty Workshop

Valued Conflict and Valued Resolution: The Role of Values in Negotiating Conflict

Though conflicts may manifest in different ways, conflict, and potential conflict resolutions, are typically underpinned by a strong sense of values.

Accepting that values tend to be stable and that people are often unwilling to negotiate or compromise how their values influence their lives, value laden conflict is often shaped by the way individuals are socialized and create meaning in the world. This workshop will focus on the features of value-laden conflict, its contours, and approaches that may provide avenues for solutions.
